MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

MR. WALLACK IN OURS. Mr. Wallack's advent upon his own stage -mad-last night us Hugh Chalcote, in Robertson's English military comedy of "Ours"-was greeted, as it ought to have been, with the pleased applause and kindly sympathy of a brilliant audience. In this community the name of Wallack has, for many years, n endeared by buppy associations; and naturally all persons who care for the theatre are glad to welcome, upon the stage his hands have reared, the comedian who wears that name with so much honor and brilliancy. Mr. Wallack-proficient in many lines of dramatic art, and ranging easily from Rover to John Garth, from Sir Oswin Mortland to Captain Bland, and from Young Wilding and Prospect Courament to Hugh Trever—is peculiarly and essen tially the best of light comedians. How capable he is of the acting that requires deep feeling, beneath levity and sparkle, no one needs to be told who has ever seen him act Young Dornton. How excellent Le is m coo', quizzical, aire, polished humor everybody knows who can recall his superh impersonation of the Captain of the Watch. There is no one else on our stage who can act such a part as Don Felix, in "The Wonder," and there is no contem porary to be for a moment compared with him as a representative of the easy, nonchaiant, gentle. half-cheerful, but altogether keen and incisive

It was in this latter character that he appeared last night-presenting a man of the world whose finer feelings have been subdued and just a little embittered, but not deadened, by sad experience of uman selfishness. His assumption of this nature Is perfect, and in his expression of it there was again to be seen that beautiful modulation of form, that incessant ripple of action, and that com-plete apparent apontaneity which are only possible to consummate art. Mr. Wallack is not an actor who willingly lets his points pass unper-nerved; and sometimes he will stand before his picture and personally show it, to make sure that it shall be seen. But this is rare, and it comes of the natural desire to give emphasis to the delicate, cossamer lines of comedy acting—to which an average audience will give no such sympathetic help as it almost always extends to even the clumblest form of tragedy. His work was remarkably free, on this occasion, from any such defect of artistic treatment. The cynical, whimsical, kind and steadfast individuality of Chalcole is made to pervade this comedy of love and war, like the flavor of the lemon in a punch, or like an invisible per-fume in the woods. There is nothing assertive about it. Mr. Wallack assumed it in this mood; and, down to the end of act second-which closes with the well-remembered, stirring and touchingly effective march of the troops-his performance was a jewel in its worth and symmetry, and a delight in its systematic blending of kindness with satire. The piece falls off in interest, and the character becomes distorted and cheapened. in the third act, which is only a sort of camp frolic; but, for two-thirds of the way, nothing of this kind could be better, or could give more absolute pleasure, than Mr. Wallack's impersonation of Hugh Chalcole in "Ours." Mr. Gilbert acted Sir Alexander Shendryn, and was a fine, manly old soldier. These two actors have a brief parting scene, deeply imbued with tender feeling praise worthy success. At the end of the first act Mr. Wallack was twice colled before the curtain, and was received with loud and emphatic plaudits. Flowers and two wreaths of laurel were thrown to him, and through out the house there was a manifestation of uncommonly cordial feeling. Mr. Wallack finally ad-

which is noted with great sincerity and therein touched with levely pathos. Miss Measor and Mr.

Herbert acted the lovers very prettily and sweetly, and Mme. Ponisi gave all requisite prominence to the prickly disposition and shrill discontent of Lady Shendryn. Miss Effic Germon is of course, piquant and froliesome as Mary Netley. And Mr. C. P. Flockton, a capital eccentric actor, is perfectly fitted with the Russian Prince. This revival is a brilliant and dressed the audience, as follows:

I have heard so many voices asking for a speech that I cannot mistake the purport of this recall. But I assure you that you will hear quite enough of speeches from me before the evening ends, and I therefore forbear to make one now. Let me, however, improve this fortunate moment—the first that I have had during the season—to thank you for your kind appreciation of the artists of my dramatic company. Speaking for them, I say that I am grateful to you; and, speaking for myself, I thank you, most heartily, for the favor you have extended toward the theatre ever since it was opened.

BARNAY AT THE THALIA.

At the Thalia Theatre last night the German tragedian Barnay made his first appearance in America. He came before this public in the stately and noble character of Cornolanus, in the German translation of Shakespeare's great historical tragedy on that subject. Our public has often exhibited an impulsive precipitancy-which judgment has presently found good reason to regret—in accepting, as great and marvellous, actors who were only foreign and strange. In this instance they made the professional acquaintance of a theroughly trained and accomplished actor whose performances have won the sympathy and admi-Germany, and whose reputation for scholarship and ability is both substantial and brilliant.

There was a great crowd in the Thalla Theatre and the welcome accorded to Mr. Barnsy was marked by an affectionate ardor and a most vociferous enthusiasm. He is an actor of a rare kind, for he combines He is an actor of a rare kind, for he combines mental subtlety with abundant physical powers of expression. His stature is lotty and magnificent. His movements are full of dignity and grace. He has a handsome and expressive countenance, of the dark, romanule type, and his voice is ruil, rich and sympathetic. His method in acting is notable chiefly for its simplicity. He does not resort to the "flaws and starts"—the net-work of artifices—which are usually to be observed in actors of the Continental schools. In appearing as Coriolanus he assumed, of course, to locarnace hanguly intellect and patrician refinement—and his embodiment of the character was massive in aspect, very cloquent, and, in the scenes with the struggle of an affectionate heart against an imperious, arrogant and vengeful will. It is impossible not to sympatize with the scorn that Coriolanus feels for human meannes—of which there is always a liberal supply. Mr. Barnay's embodiment of this condition not only presents by with impressive force but invests it with the charm of sympathy. He evoked repeated tunuits of applicates. The coast of the piece is appended. The personations of Menenius, Volumnia and Virgilla were especially strong at 1 inne:

A FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY RETIRES.

The directors of the Tradesmen's Fire Insurance Company on Tuesday decided to retire from business. The outstanding policies have been reinsured in the Standard, of London, of which company T. Y. Brown, the secretary of the fradesmen's since its organization, has been appointed resident manager. Of necessity the organization of the company will be kept up until the expiration of the company will be kept up until the expiration of the contracts now existing, but no new risks will be assumed. From statements made yesterday by Mr. Brown, it appears that the company, which has a capital of $300,000, had on January 1, 1882, a premium reserve of $150,081 olt, a reserve for unpaid losses and other habities of $33,156 70, and a net surplus of $50,252 31. It has been uniformly prosperous until last year, when it passed both its semi-annual dividends.

until last year, when it passed both its semi-annual dividends.

D. B. Keeler, president of the company, said yesterday to a TRIBUNE reporter: "There is very little of a statement to make. The Tradesmen's, which I organized in 1858, is simply retiring from business because it can no longer do business with profit to itself. We have been successful heretofore, but are now overridden by the big English companies that have cut rates so low that we cannot afford to compete with them. We go out with a good record and clean hands, reinsuring our risks and holding a surplus large enough to pay our stockholders their in vestment and from 10 to 15 per cent besides."

BOLD THIEVES ARRESTED.

Before Justice Patterson in the Essex Market Police Court yesterday Detectives Piercs and McCauley arraigned John Murphy, alias Ahearn, age nineteen, of No. 361 Madison-st., and Patrick Hughes, age twenty-seven, of No. 657 Water-st. Both are members of the "Hook Gang." It is alleged that on the afternoon of December 26 they went into the butcher-shop of Angust Rehner, No. 50 Jackson-st., and attempted to purion the contents of the čash drawer. Michael Schnepp, at employee, resisted them with a cleaver and a large knife. Murphy drew arevolver and his confederate a club, notwithstanding which the butcher-boy compelled the intruders to beat a hasty reupat without obtaining the money. Justice Patterson held the prisoners for trial without bail.

AN IBREGULAR TRIAL.

Justice Barrett yesterday discharged from in Justice Barrett yesterday discharged from imprisonment Mrs. Teresa Langdon, who was recently convicted in the Court of Special Sessions of an assault and battery upon her child. By some mistake she was tried in the absence of her counsel. The Court of Special Sessions, when its attention was called to the fact, declared that it could give no relief. A writ of habeas corpus was obtained and the prisoner was yesterday taken before Justice Barrett, who said that her trial had been irregular and unconstitutional.

THE REMOVAL OF MR. HOWARD

A SPICY TALK WITH THE APPRAISER. WHAT HE SAYS ABOUT THE NOMINATION OF MR

The nomination of General Appraiser A. P. Ketchum to succeed James R. Howard as Appraiser led to a good deal of talk and some little surprise in political circles yesterday. It was understood that the opposition which had been shown to the appointment of Mr. Ketchum, and the fact that his removal had been asked for by many of the Presideut's former political friends, would interfere with his prospects of succeeding Mr. Howard. It was rumored yesterday that this was the beginning of a number of changes in Federal offices in this city, and that M. W. Cooper's name would soon be sent to the Senate to succeed Collector Robertson. A TRIBUNE reporter called on Appraiser Howard yesterday to make some inquiries in regard to the change in his office.

"I had anticipated the possible appointment of some personal friend of the President," said Mr. Howard, "such as ex-Deputy-Collector Lydecker, Deputy-Collector Blatchford, or even ex-Appraiser Dutcher, but I have been again and again assured that the appointment of Mr. Ketchum was not possible, because the President knew of certain abuses existing in his office, and knew that he had opposed the regular political organization with which the Prestdent was identified, in some instances. I knew that the President's nearest political friends favored Mr. Ketchum's removal from his present position." "Why did they ask for his removal?"

"On the ground that it was notoriously known that he was paying out about $10,000 per annum on his pay-roils to relations and others who were rendering the Government no sort of service. The case of Edward S Fowler, discharged from the office of the Appraiser for cause and put on the pay-rolls of the General Appraiser, through the influence of the Upton-Lamphere Treasury ring, and the case of John J. Ketchum, brother of the General Appraiser, are cases in point. Mr. Ketchum's brother is a practising dentist, who never comes near the de-partment even for his monthly checks, as they are sent to him, and Fowler draws $2,000 a year from the Treasury and passes most of his time in Washington City dining Treasury clerks and lying about the Appraiser who removed him. Judge Hogeboom, the predecessor of Mr. Ketchum, employed in the same office one clerk and one messenger, where now there are ten clerks and a messenger."

"Did not the late Treasury Commission investi-gate the General Appraiser's office t" "The chairman of the late Treasury Commission,

H. B. James, being the head centre of the Treasury ring, instead of putting an end to the $10,000 steal, recommended that $1,000 be added to it. Ex-Policeman Brackett, who united with Mr. Bliss and the Treasury ring in pushing forward the candidacy of Ketchum, took special pains to see that the leak was not investigated to his candidate's office." "Have you any reason to believe that that Commissior was appointed with any political object in

"The Commission was named and organized by Bliss and Brackett to make Ketchum Apprais r, for the purpose of securing the control of the $500,000 of patronage in the Appraiser's office, in the interest of Bliss, Ketchum and the Treasury ring."

"Have you in any way incurred the hostility of George Bliss f"

"I have. About the time that Mr. Bliss was insulting the Mayor of New-York City every morning for three months he walked into my office and insulted me. He appeared as counsel for an importer who had long been defrauding the Government by undervalming certain ores. The valuation of these ores had been repeatedly advanced by my expert of thirty years' experience to meet market values. Mr. Bliss in behalf of his client complained of these increased valuations and wanted me to overrule my subordinates, which I refused to do. He became insolent over the matter and I called him a common scold and dubbed him the vitriol-thrower—the accuracy of which latter characterization he seemed to recognize, and soon left my office."

"What have been your relations with Secretary Foiger?"

"The Secretary has been hostile to me from the time he came into office, because of his intimate relations with Mr. Foiger and Mr. Bliss occupy the same office in Washington. I did not respond to the assessment circulars in his behalf to the extent of a dollar."

Under the law the Appraiser has the full and complete right and authority to nominate examiners and other employes for appointment to office in his department. As Mr. Forger's relative had passed ten points below the minimum, his nomination would have been a plain and palpable violation of the Civil Service rules. As I had never violated these rules in a single instance in the judgment of those qualified to construe them, I respectively declined to do so in this case."

"Have these Civil Service regulations been observed in Mr. Keethum's present office?"

"Taey have been violated in that office every day in the year for three years and a half, not withstanding that Naval Officer Burr, who draited the Civil Service rules, officially reported that these rules as clearly and distinctly applied to the General Appraiser's office as to my own. This fact is sufficient proof that the alleged violations of the rules in my office have nothing to do with the change, especially as all the rules and regulations have been eponly and notoriously disregaraced in the Sub-Treasury, to which office they in express terms apply."

"None whatever. On the contrary, scores of importers have assured me that the business was never more promptly or satisfactority done. They have again and again said that what the Appraiser's department most needed was to be let alone and kept out of politics. Merchants have often said that the special agents of the Treasury Department needed investigation most, as they were the only causes of triction between the taxpayers and the Government."

"What do you consider to be the real cause of the attempt to supersede you?"

"The fact that I was known to be a close personal riend of President Hayes and of President Garfield, being appointed to office by the former and continued by the latter, and because I refused to prostute my office to serve political and personal ends. I removed all inefficient and worthless men from office, thereby meuring the nestinity of men of large influence, as well as the enantly of two daily newspapers in this city. The Treasury Department, by the way, has taken great care to furnish the newspapers with overything prejudicial to me, and has withheld from the public my answers to the Brackett charges and everything clee that was in my favor."

A letter was read from Goorge Ticknor Curtis, accepting the office of president of the society and expressing regret at not being able to attend the meetine. Mr. Curtis favored the codification of the State laws, subject to revision. After mentioning the many sources to which lawyers and indges must go for the law on questions that come before them, Mr. Curtis continued as follows:

Be the differences of opinion on particular provisions or texts what they may, there can be no doubt of the utility, part from the idea of making a labor-awing machine, in haying a specific and certain text as the rule of decision, instead of leaving the Judge to extract from conflicting decisions or obscure sources the rule that he will apply to the case in hand. I am well enough aware that a court may misconstrue a code, and that human hanginge must necessarily be inadequate to the comprehension in an exact text of all possible cases. But I have had experience enough in litigation and in the action of courts to satisfy me that fully one-half of all the delay and expense caused by the necessity of resorting to an appellate tribunal aries from the probable error on the part of the trial Judge to asceriain and apply rightly the proper rule of decision. The danger of this can never be waolly avoided, but it can be greatly diminished by a code, provided all proper care has been taken in its preparation.

TARIFF RAFORM

A LETTER FROM I S. MOORE.

To The Editor of The Tribune.

Sig: You have several times done me the honor to mention my name in connection with the Tariff Commission report and the proposed revision of the tariff. In your very interesting and able editorial, "The Next Question," which appeared in your journal to-day, you mention me thus : " Mr. Moore, for instance, appears in public two or three times a day to belabor the measure from a free-trade point of view." Although I have had the misfortune to differ from your very influential journal on the tariff question, and indeed have broken many a lance in the cause with its able conductors, I have always respected the opinions of my opponents as men ought to do whose motives (although antago-nistic) are pure. And I feel sure you will allow me to say a few words in explanation of my criticism on the commission's report and the work of the Ways and Means Committee on tariff revision.

First-Am I really a free trader? In my pro posed revision of the tariff which I laid before the Tariff Commission I made the following changes, based on the consumption of 1881:

Commoditi's	Consump-	duty calcu- lated ad va- lorem.	Revenue Collected. 1881.	Pro- pos'd av'g duty.	Estimated Revenue.
Class I. Textiles. Cotton mfrs. Wooi'n mfrs. Mfrs. of slik Mfrs. of flax	33,103,323	88.55 67.80 58.80	18,506,898	p'ret 26 45 45 25	Dollars. 7,021,029 14,896,495 14,069,751 4,897,817
Mfrs. homp	3,897,823	27.10	1,079,155	25	974,458
			59,784,778		41,859,548

to $59,784,773. In other words, I proposed a reduction of less than 14 per cent average on a gross revenue of $59,784,773. Can this be termed free trade, or can I be termed a rabid free-trader ! On pig-iron I proposed a reduction of $2 a ton, from $7 to $5. On steel rails I proposed a duty of $15 & ton. On raw sugar I proposed duty of 40 per cent ad valore duty of valorem chemicals and dyestuffs I pro-On all posed a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem. and if you peruse my tariff revision further you must admit that my proposals for a reduction of duties are moderate; nay, very moderate. The reason for this moderation is simply because my economic knowledge is not derived from books or theories, but is the result of an old practical merchant's acquaintance with the commerce of the world. I believe in a gradual reduction of duties, and above all, in a simplification of the pres ent complicated tariff, It is true I proposed free wool and free raw materials, such as hemp, flax, jute, all kinds of ores and many other article of the kind, which would sweep away $13,773,000 revenue if computed on the importation of 1881. But this proposal is in reality in favor of the manufacturers. And right here, allow me to assure you that my wishes for the prosperity of the manufac turing industry of the country are as strong and genuine as any one's in the land. And I am practical enough to know that without free raw material there can be no genuine manufacturing prosperity.

Second-If not a free-trader, what do I aim at f Well, I aim at simplification. I aim at exposing and, if possible, rectifying those shameful tariff tricks which so great and influential a journal as THE TRIBUNE would indeed be the first to conas THE TRIBUNE would indeed be the first to condemn. It is very morning THE TRIBUNE informed its readers that the Committee of Ways and Means has passed the Tariff Comission's proposed duty on raw wool. Well, then, let me show a tariff trick contained therein. The classification in what is called combing or clothing wool has not been changed. The changes made by the Tariff Commission are as follows, and for the convenience of the readers of THE TRIBUNE I will place the present reading and the changes side by side:

Present Tariff on Wool.

Wool of the first class, the value whereof at the last last port or place whence exceptred to the United States in such such ports, shall be "Thirty" or less per pound, 10 cents cents or less per pound, 10 per pound and 11 per cent cents or less per pound, 10 per pound and 11 per cent cents per pound.

Wools of the same class, Wool of the same class

Wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States excluding charges in States, excluding charges in State such port, shall exceed 32 such port, shall exceed cents per pound, 12 cents per pound, and 10 per cent 12 cents per pound.

Now, theu, the compound duties are abolished, which is all very well, but the trick is, first in lowering the valuation from 32 cents per pound. 30 cents, and second, to perastently adhere to the most tricky of all assessments, in ordering that a specific duty of 10 cents a pound on raw wool shall depend upon the foreign valuation of 30 cents a pound or less. If the appraiser in the United States has to determine the value of raw wool and have that almost occult science of determining the value of wool between 30 cents a pound and 30 kg cents, the latter price would of course throw the duty into the 12 cents per pound category, instead of 10 cents per pound. Why in the world should there not be a simple advalorem rate? If, on the other hand, it is feared that undervaluation would be practised, why give the temptation to importers who, by the undervaluation of 1 cent, may, kg of a cent, would save 2 cents a bound on the duty?

I appeal to the most persistent, influential, and one of the oldest journals that advocates pratection, whether this proposal to revise the tariff on wool is a simplification.

Now, I beg to state that I do not criticise the rate of duty. In fact, I can admit of nothing less than free wool. But, as I pride myself on being a practical man, I philosophically as mit that my conomic watch is alread of time. We may have free wool in a year—two or three years. But if there is to be a duiy on raw wool, why should it not be plain and hones? Why, let mo ask, does the commission reduce the old valuation of 32 cents a pound to 30 cents a pound? Is it not clear that that 2 cents lower valuation, which entails an additional duty of 2 cents a pound on wool costing over 30 cents, must necessarily prevent millions of pounds of wool coming to this market? Why all this confusion? Why all this shuffling of 2 cents on the valuation of wool? If honest, wall meaning simplification was at
